Michal Rosen-Zvi

Option (Option) is a financial instrument that gives the holder the right, but not the obligation, to buy or sell an underlying asset at a predetermined price (strike price) on or before a certain date (expiration date). Options are used for hedging, speculation, and arbitrage. The price of an option is determined by its intrinsic value and its time value. The intrinsic value is the difference between the current price of the underlying asset and the strike price. The time value is the value of the option due to the time remaining until expiration. The price of an option is also influenced by the volatility of the underlying asset. Volatility is a measure of the degree of variation in the price of the underlying asset. The higher the volatility, the higher the price of the option. Options are also used for portfolio management. For example, a portfolio manager can use options to hedge the risk of a portfolio. If the portfolio manager is concerned that the price of the underlying asset will fall, they can buy put options. If the portfolio manager is concerned that the price of the underlying asset will rise, they can buy call options. Options are also used for arbitrage. Arbitrage is the practice of buying and selling the same asset at different prices to make a profit. For example, a trader can buy a call option and sell the underlying asset at the same time. If the price of the underlying asset rises, the trader will make a profit. If the price of the underlying asset falls, the trader will not make a profit. Options are a complex financial instrument, and it is important to understand the risks and rewards before trading them. This book, Option Volatility Pricing Pdf, provides a comprehensive guide to the theory and practice of options trading. It covers the basics of options, the Black-Scholes model, and advanced topics such as volatility and arbitrage. The book is written in a clear and concise style, making it accessible to both beginners and experienced traders. It is a must-read for anyone interested in options trading.
